Karin Kuruma is a four-door sports car available in the GTA Online Heists Update. The overall shape and front face of the car seems to be based on the Mitsubishi Lancer Evolution X, while the rear is based on the 2015 Subaru WRX STI. It is available in both the regular version and the armored version. Karin Kuruma GTA 5 Online Front ViewKarin Kuruma GTA 5 Online Rear ViewAccording to SouthernSanAndreasSuperAutos.com Karin Kuruma has 6 gears, a top speed of 147 mph and weighs 2,866lbs. It also has the capability of 4WD and is very maneuverable. Even with Turbo already equipped, the player can add another Turbo for a much higher acceleration. Thanks to the light chassis on both versions of the car, it tends to climb two wheels and even flip over during sharp, high-speed turns. It's a little better sultan in terms of high speed. However, in terms of grip, Karin Sultan faces heavy ground when attacking corners at high speed. Karin Kuruma usually slips, trying to attack corners at similar speeds, making him feel as if Kuruma has a non-existent abs. Karin Kuruma (Armored) Karin Kuruma (Armored) is an armored version of Kurum. It was introduced to GTA Online as part of the Heists Update.This car is armored similarly to the Imponte Duke O'Death. He featured in Fleeca Job - Kuruma robbery installation and in Fleeca Job as an escape vehicle. The performance is slightly different from Kurum's. It has the same features as a regular Couruma, but it is much more durable against collisions and shots, because of its bulletproof windows. One of the drawbacks of the armored version compared to the regular version is that the view is much more difficult in the presentation of the FPS. Karin Kuruma (Armored) is a car Auto Internet as part of the Heists update. The contents of the Show Design Grand Theft Auto Online I don't want to call it an idiot-proof car robbery, I mean there is no limit to some people's stupidity, but you have to be pretty damn dumb to let the cops catch you in one of them. He has muscles, thrust, light weight armor that shouldn't compromise performance, this one is for us. Lester Cross during the installation of Fleeca Job - Kuruma.The car is essentially Kuruma equipped with bulletproof armor panels on the roof and cabin and protective frames above the lights, as well as bulletproof windows that are rarely destroyed under the fire of small arms. The car received minor cosmetic changes on the body, where the icons and brake lights of the roof were removed, and the original chrome parts were replaced with blackouts. The rear bumper has large exhaust fumes and a spoiler with bolts on the details on the sides, while the interior has a roll of the cage. The color distribution is similar to the usual Couruma, having a basic color for the body and internal sewing. However, the secondary color affects the armor coating, the protective frames on the lights, the parts on the front wings and the roll of the cage. The design of the wheel is in conjunction with the usual Couruma, although painted black. The front quarter ViewTop ViewRear quarter ViewFrontSideRear ViewEngine ViewUnderside ViewDetailOnther performance modeling Grand Theft Auto Online Kuruma has a simulated two-frame straight six-engine, placed longitudinal in the front engine, all wheel drives layout (pretty unique distribution of 1/3 engine power on the front wheels and the rest of the rear wheels). According to Southern San Andreas Super Autos, the car has a 6-speed gearbox, a top speed of 147mph and weighs 2,866lbs. Kuruma has a turbo-dumping sound effect by default, although the player can add another turbo for a significantly higher acceleration. The performance is a little different from the usual Kurum. Although it has a little less thrust (although still very good due to the high thrust of the normal Kurum), slightly weaker brakes, and slightly lower acceleration and top speed, it makes up these disadvantages in its durability from collisions and shots; against most firearms, it is about three times stronger than a conventional Kuruma. It is equipped with bulletproof windows, which are rarely destroyed when fired, although bullet holes will appear. This can protect players inside the vehicle, since a bullet shot through narrow panels will not harm the player's health greatly, although players should remember that their vision is significantly obstructed in the field of first-person vision. They cannot drop an explosive weapon, and the driver cannot fire a gun behind the car as they can only shoot forward, both of which are significant flaws. In addition, rear passengers cannot shoot forward. The only thing to which vulnerable armored Couruma, so it's (which instantly destroy the vehicle) and high-caliber weapons (the rebel pickup truck mounted the gun takes it in 16 seconds aimed at its engine), even with its armor maxed out, although its armored panels can withstand some vague explosive ammunition from the heavy sniper Mk II. Thus, players must be careful around explosions when using this vehicle. Also, compared to the conventional Kuruma, its engine produces much more torque, allowing it to ram through traffic harder and lighter than most vehicles of similar size, but due to speed. Finally, armored Kuruma is immune to the warp of the accident, which is an advantage in that the wheels are never blocked from any accident, but the disadvantage is that the player (s) inside may not know how damaged Kuruma is until he starts to burn. Because of the armor, the car is noticeably heavier than the usual Kuruma (an additional 1,700 kilograms of weight is added to the 1500 kilogram reserves), and this predictably means that it has a more understeer. It is also a little more difficult to ride on uneven terrain, although it is not very noticeable, as the usual Kuruma is quite good off-road. It's also harder to cause a spin because of the armored option having better handling than its usual counterpart. In high-speed turns, Armored Kuruma is less likely than stocks to lift themselves on two wheels and potentially roll over. Driving without a road is one of the best in its class, and with very strong traction, it fares well to climb hills. Its minor flaws compared to its stock are completely overshadowed by its advantages; Thanks to these advantages, Armored Kuruma is extremely popular with players, often a staple of many online garages. Despite the presence of armored windows, players and NPCs can shoot from the car without damaging the vehicle. In addition, arrows outside the car will also be able to shoot through windows and damage Despite its obvious armor and handling much heavier than its unarmored version, the armored Kuruma is listed as having the same weight as its unarmored counterpart at Southern San Andreas Super Autos. Even if the doors of the armored Kurum are separated, the players inside still cannot use a throwing weapon. Despite the inaccessibility of all other vehicles, the armored Kuruma uses clean black tinted windows. However, said the windows are only used on Kurumas, which are spawned through trainers, races or creator. The car's windshield can also be tinted, although they will not prevent the player's first-person vision from appearing as ordinary windows. The default radio stations of Armored Couruma are Radio Mirror Park, Winewood Boulevard Radio, and Los Santos Rock Radio. The vehicle sometimes spawns with the rear windows open, which should be impossible as they should be too thick to slide into the doorbar. This is a known error in GTA Online and occurs mainly when it spawned a game after the end of a race or mission. See also Kuruma - Standard version. Duke O'Death is another armored vehicle with a very similar armored coating.
